Sanfuel Gardner, violinist, was heard in a recital at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Gardner, who received his musical training in this city, has often been heard here and has earned Country Club Course Helps for himself a considerable support among music lovers. He elected yesterday to appear as both performer and composer, and the well balanced programme con-tained a group of four short pleces from a century could be compared.

When Grisi, Rubint, Lablache and their associates sang at the Theatre des Italiens in the early 30's Italian performances were at their senith. But never was French lyric drama given with more vocal beauty than in the seasons of Eames, Meiba, Sembrich, Jean and Edouard de Reszke, Lasaile, Maurel and Plancon at the Metropolitan.

The great "Romeo and Juliette" casts of those days cannot be approached today, and what the Grand Opera of Paris has to offer us must be accepted with such gratitude as can be summoned. The performance at the Lexington Theatre last evening was not one of distinction, but it had certain clearly defined merits. The chief of these was style. The singers of the Prench stage.
